

The Society of American Foresters
Sir William Schlich Memorial Award
(Awarded even-numbered years only)

PURPOSE: To recognize broad and outstanding contributions to the field of forestry with emphasis on, but not limited to, policy and national or international activities.

INFORMATION ON SIR WILLIAM SCHLICH: Sir William Schlich, a 19th-century English forester, is remembered for his efforts to advance forestry education and practices. From 1867 to 1885 he was a member of the Royal Indian Forest Service, working to establish British timber reserves in its colonial possessions. He is known for having the greatest impact on British forestry in the early years of this century.

Schlich advocated the idea of systematic forest management on public and private estates for which he prepared management plans. To advance modern forestry practices Schlich wrote a five-volume work, The Manual of Forestry, that discussed silviculture, forest protection, and forest management. Throughout his distinguished career Schlich went on to publish numerous papers on the emerging field of forestry.

Education played a large role in Schlich's life. He established the forestry department of the Royal Indian Engineering College at Coopers Hill, and he founded the School of Forestry at Oxford in 1905. These two institutions have been instrumental in the training of the majority of British foresters who have served throughout the world.
